Check Your Symptoms

Are you experiencing health-related symptoms? Not sure what they mean? Then stop by WebMD's symptom checker.

You can click on an area of the body to see common symptoms. Select the symptoms you're experiencing and get a series of questions. Your answers to the questions will tell you when and if you should contact your doctor.

WebMD also offers related health information. The articles help you understand health risks and prepare for your appointment. You can also read about prevention and home treatment. This is one site you'll want to bookmark!

Remember, the Web is a great source for medical information. But it is no substitute for a visit to your physician.

So, How Hot Is It?

There are plenty of weather sites on the Web. They're full of detailed information, such as dew points, barometer readings, temperature, wind speed and radar screens.

Today's site does all of that and more.

There are forecast maps, aviation maps and computer model maps. Check out the personal weather stations, too. Who knows? Maybe someone down the street is collecting weather data.

If you want to know anything about the weather, it's here.

Pardon My French

Damn Interesting is a blog that focuses mostly on science and technology topics. Don't expect a re-hash of the science and technology section of the newspaper. And don't expect anything so boring as a textbook.

The stories run the gamut from the bizarre to the fantastic. They're arranged by date. But if you want to browse by category, click the Categories button. Then choose your topic from the list.

This is the type of site you'll probably spend hours perusing. And once you start reading, I'm sure you'll forgive these guys for the name they chose. It might, in fact, be the only appropriate name for the site!
