ONLINE ART EXHIBITS

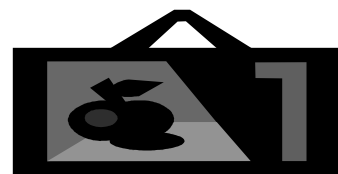

When you think of museums, you probably think of large buildings. The contents of these buildings may or may not interest you and the Internet is probably the farthest thing from your mind.

Today's Cool Site will change all that. MOOM is a museum of sorts. It means Museum of Online Museums. The listing of museums is divided into three sections. The first section contains traditional museums that have interesting online exhibits. The next two sections get increasingly strange -- in a good way.

According to the site, the listings change, so who knows what you'll find. You may find a site with pictures of manhole covers from around the world. Another one was dedicated to East German paper bags. You won't believe this until you see for yourself, but these museums are for real!

The Open Video Project

This site has thousands of videos for your viewing pleasure. Some are in color, others are from the silent film era. My personal favorites are the ones Thomas Edison made.

There are a wide variety of videos for you to view. You might like the historical or scientific ones, or maybe the old commercials are your thing. I'll leave that up to you to decide. But choose carefully -- there's probably too many for you to watch them all!

RECOVER LOST MONEY

Even thrifty folks can let money accidentally slip past. That's the reason to check for unclaimed property.

NAUPA (National Association of Unclaimed Property Administrators -- what a mouthful!) makes it easy to find unclaimed property. It provides quick links to states' databases of unclaimed property. Just type in your name and see if money is waiting for you. You could have forgotten bank accounts, utility deposits or more.
