LET'S TALK ABOUT THE WEATHER

The National Weather Service has been around since 1870. But it's done a stellar job of keeping up with the times. Not only does it have the best meteorological equipment, it has a "rad" Web site. Other weather sites just don't compare. Plus, look Mom, no ads!

On the home page, click a region on the map. Then narrow down your selection by clicking on the regional map. You'll get a seven-day forecast, along with hazardous weather warnings.

Don't forget to check out the Doppler images and animated satellite imagery. Or browse historical information and climate data.

THE ENTIRE WEB?

All search sites are a little different. So if you're trying to locate hard-to-find information, you should check as many as possible.

We're all familiar with Google, Yahoo! and MSN. But those aren't the only search sites in town. There are others that are also very good.

AlltheWeb is one of them. It lets you limit searches to news sources or pictures. It even searches Audio and Video files. You can get fantastic results on this site.

Like Yahoo! and Google, AlltheWeb provides advanced options and preferences. You will appreciate the option that filters out offensive content. It isn't perfect, but it helps!

AlltheWeb doesn't offer a service like Google Earth, which displays satellite imagery. By the way, some governments are complaining about Google Earth.
